Reerdell, convicted at the first trial, was made a witness in favor of the government at the second, and would have been released in any event. The verdiet of the jury exonerating Brady, Dorsey, and their associates, from the charge of conspiracy exonerated Reerdell also, although be had come into court and confessed himself guilty of the offense of which the jury had indirectly declared him innocent. Price, one of the indicted contractors, has offered himsplf as a witness against Brady and Kellogg in a case of bribery which is yet to come off. He will be allowed to go scot-free. In the case against Boone, another large Star route contractor, the government has ordered a not pros. There are other indictments against Dorsey, but it is given but that they are barred by the statute of limitations, and that onsequently he will not again be brought to trial. From some cause or other the goveroment, as a prosecutor, has been unfortunate enough throughout. The miscarriage of justice has been complete.

EARLY CRITICISES SHERIDAN.

He Thinks He is Deficient in General ship, and Should Have Reen Dismissed the Service.

The Boston Globe says that a party o Northern tourists, while traveling recently in the Shenandosh Valley, met Gen. Jubal A. Early, who sharply criticised the tactics of his adversary, Gen. Sheridan, in that memorable encounter. "Sheridan," said he, "ought to have been court-martialed and dismissed the service by his government for a lowing myself or any part of my army thave escaped capture on that day. I had a niantry and artillery force of less than 12. 000 men in that battle, and my total cavalry force was less than 3000, much of the latter poorly equipped and organized, and couse-quently could not be relied upon for service in a botly contested action. Sheridan's rmy numbered from 45,000 to 48,000 effective men, and sgainst these terrible odds of over one I maintained for bours the unequal contest, with varying chances of victory. Sheridan's cavelry was greatly superior to my own, and constantly outlanked me. Had he thrown his force on the right, cutting superior force on the right, cutting off my line of retreat by the pike to New town, it would have been very disastrous to my army. Tois I expected he would do, but was unable to guard against it, every man o my force being engaged. It was a relief to me to find this avenue of retreat open and numolested when I was no longer able to con-tinue the unequal fight.
